Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: .odours, and shining with bright waters, it lies like an oasis in the heart of dreary wastes, the barren monotony of which is varied only on the east by the shattered marbles and ruined temples of Tadmor and Palmyra. No rival, indeed, to the Earthly Paradise which has so often fired PALESTINE. 135 the imagination of the Oriental poet is to be found along the eastern side of the mountains, because they give forth no other stream comparable to the Barada in. copiousness; but a certain amount of land has been recovered from the desert, where the corn-crops are sufficient to recompense the toil of cultivation, and olive-groves are abundant. Drear and naked is the appearance of the country as we approach Palestine; though some of the mountains--as Carmel, Bashan, and Tabor--are richly wooded, and many of the valleys are green spots in the wilderness. Particularly is this the case with the valley of the Jordan, with its groves of noble trees, its thickets of oleanders, its clumps of fragrant shrubs, and its gardens of rose and balsam. One side of the Lake of Tiberias presents the very abomination of desolation; on the other, the hills are gentle, the vales soft, silvan, and romantic, and the dells enriched with the palm, the olive, and the sycamore, trees which have suggested so many striking images and apologies to the sacred writers. The Holy City itself stands on a declivity, encompassed by seven stony mountains, wild and desolate....
