Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincolt Company. 1872. We are not much encouraged to expect anything remarkable iu this new venture upon finding, as the first statement of the preface: This little book is meant for young children, and the following as the initial proposition of the text: Article 1. Wo now commence the study of Arithmetic. Theauthor has not diverged greatly from the beaten track, and his work is not much different from older text-books of the kind, except in the greater frequency and beauty of the illustrations. MINOR NOTICES. Lee Shepard, Boston, send us a specimen of their series of monthly publications entitled Half-Hour Recreation m Popular Science. It is handsomely executed on tinted paper, and filled with interesting statements concerning late discoveries in spectrum analysis. Dr. Winchell, of our University, will prepare one number of the series, upon...
