That It is feasible for a man to be out his money on the finding of a product at destination when he protected himself by preserving and properly sampling shipments at origin. Second. That it was right that he should do this and be recognized in the matter.Third. That many of the rules of the Cottonseed Exchanges would not hold water. Fourth. That it is their intention to be fair to their customers but when we use every precaution to protect our interest they believe they should have some rights in the matter. Fifth. That the Arkansas Industrial Laboratory is recognized as reputable and capable. Sixth. That they are willing to submit a portion of the sample forwarded to them to a third chemist. This department replied. First. That dealers in Indiana must sell their products in compliance with the laws of Indiana. Second. That the Indiana Law makes the analysis of this department prima facie evidence of the composition of feeds offered for sale in the state. Third. That this department was absolutely impartial and had no pecuniary interest in the transaction. Fourth. That the proposition that the rules of the cottonseed exchanges, which provide for the drawing of a sample in the presence Italics not present in original of impartial witnesses was one sided was unique when compared with the proposition that the feed should be judged on a sample taken...
