BOBBINS, Professor of Botany in the College of Agriculture of the University of California AND JEROME ISENBARGER Lecturer, Natural Science Loyola University, Chicago Sixth Printing NEW YORK JOHN WILEY SONS, INC. LONDON CHAPMAN HALL, LIMITED PREFACE It is the belief of the authors of this book that no subject contributes more, when properly taught, to the attainment of the cardinal principles of secondary education than does biological science. It is the main province of this text to lay a foundation of fundamental principles which will enable pupils to develop an understanding of the significance of plant life which is such an important part of their environment. Moreover, the work in botany should be made practical in the sense that it should supply a basis of fact necessary to an understanding of principles, so that the student can use them in developing within himself a degree of social, civic, ethical, and esthetic efficiency. A practical course in botany should aid in developing an appreciation of the possibilities of improvement of the home environment through putting into practice a knowledge of the principles of plant growth. Window-plant culture, landscaping of home grounds, vegetable and flower gardening not only contribute to the attractiveness of the home, but they also provide pleasant and profitable avocations as worthy use of leisure time. Also, knowledge of foods, bacteria, and the laws of sanitation, and the life out-of-doors occasioned by engaging in vocations and avocations along the lines of plant study and plant culture, both tend toward personal efficiency by making the person a healthier individual. Certain aims and objectives...
